ABRAHAM LINCOLN: VAMPIRE HUNTER
Seth Grahame-Smith

The film rights for ABRAHAM LINCOLN: VAMPIRE HUNTER have been optioned by Tim Burton, Timur Bekmambetov (director of Wanted), and Jim Lemley (veteran producer).

Seth Grahame-Smith, author of the New York Times bestselling Pride and Prejudice and Zombies, follows up that phenomenon with this Goodwin/McCullough-style epic of our greatest president, revealing for the first time his secret lifelong battle with the undead.

When Abraham Lincoln was nine years old, his mother died from an ailment called the "milk sickness." Only later did he learn that his mother's deadly affliction was actually the work of a local vampire, seeking to collect on Abe's father's unfortunate debts.

When the truth became known to the young Abraham Lincoln, he wrote in his journal, "henceforth my life shall be one of rigorous study and devotion. I shall become learned in all things--a master of mind and body. And this mastery shall have but one purpose."

The purpose? Elimination of all vampires.

Using the journal as his guide, Seth has reconstructed the true life story of our greatest president for the first time, while uncovering the role vampires played in the birth, growth, and near-death of our nation.

Includes 15-20 black and white photos spread throughout the book, consisting of hilarious and creatively photoshopped historical images.
