New York Times bestselling author Fern Michaels delivers the ongoing adventures of her beloved characters with this 18th installment in the unstoppable Sisterhood series!

A year and a half has passed since the Ladies of Pinewood received their presidential pardon. Giddy with their new freedom, the Sisters scatter to the four corners of the globe only to return to their comfort zone when they find out that Yoko and Harry Wong are the proud new parents of triplets—all girls.

Cell phones and faxes ring around the world as the news of the triplets is announced, with the official christening just thirty days away. They continue to ring as the Sisters and their new husbands agree to meet up in England for the return trip to the States together. But the moment the private Gulfstream is cruising at 30,000 feet, the crew informs their passengers that the plane is being hijacked. Not by terrorists, but by a small select group of men from Interpol who claim to need the vigilantes' help desperately.

Just seconds before their cell phones are confiscated, Jack manages to call Harry to apprise him of the situation. Will the Sisters agree to toss their new freedom and take on this assignment, or will they try to outwit the Interpol agents?
