THE UNNAMED

Joshua Ferris

Praise for Joshua Ferris' Then We Came to the End:

"Heartfelt and delivered in solemn deadpan. It may even be, in its own modest way, a great American novel." — Los Angeles Times

"Fabulous....with the sort of exuberance and energy that marked Jay McInerney's Bright Lights, Big City." — Chicago Tribune

"Hilarious in a 'Catch-22' way, but with an undercurrent of sadness that works counterpoint to all the absurdity." — Stephen King

A daring new novel from Joshua Ferris, author of the National Book Award finalist Then We Came to the End: in a world filled with every comfort and convenience, one man discovers that nature, and his own body, will always have the upper hand.

During their 20-year marriage, Tim and Jane Farnsworth have savored the fruits of his labor as a high-powered lawyer: they live in a beautiful home, they travel on exotic vacations, they don't worry about money. When a past illness sudden resurfaces, Tim is driven out of his comfortable existence and into a way of life that he doesn't recognize, and that tests Jane's love in the most fundamental ways.

At once a heartbreaking story of family and marriage, and a meditation on the unseen forces of nature and desire, THE UNNAMED is a deeply felt, luminous novel about modern life, ancient yearnings, and the power of human connection.
